(U) The 2015 National Gang Report (NGR) presents an overview of current gang activities and trends in the United States. Intelligence in this report is derived primarily from a survey administered by the National Alliance of Gang Investigators' Associations (NAGIA) and from a second survey on Safe Streets and Gang Task Forces administered by the FBI Safe Streets and Gang Unit (SSGU). The quantitative data herein is supplemented by qualitative open source reports and reporting from federal, state, local, and tribal law enforcement from across the nation.

(U) Trends

(U) Over the past several years, there has been reporting of OMG members retaining employment in various white-collar professions. Accordingly, many OMG members are business owners. Most survey responses report that a preponderance of businesses owned by OMG members involve manual labor, which perpetuates the myth that OMGs are typically blue-collar workers. Based on survey responses, businesses owned by motorcycle gang members predominately involve the service industry, such as motorcycle repair shops and tattoo shops.<sup>44</sup> In some instances, OMGs use their businesses to facilitate criminal activity.

(U) OMG Involvement in Criminal Activity*Objective Thoughts?

- What constitutes low, Med, High
- Switched from % to Jurisdictions
- Single lines for low, med, high to stacked
- Convictions vs. charged
- No questions shown to correlate to stats
- ONLY had OMG units take the survey for the OMG section!

(U) SCOPE AND METHODOLOGY

(U) The purpose of the 2015 NGR is to provide a national overview of the current gang threat in the United States by collecting, analyzing, and synthesizing data obtained from law enforcement agencies across the nation. The assessments contained herein were derived from data provided by law enforcement through the 2014 FBI Safe Streets and Gang Task Force Survey, the NAGIA 2015 National Gang Report Survey, law enforcement reporting, and open source information.

(U) One hundred and nine respondents completed the 2014 FBI Safe Streets and Gang Task Force Survey to create a representative sample of the five Safe Streets and Gang Task Force geographic regions. Combining data from the Safe Streets and Gang Task Forces allowed the NGIC to incorporate data from our partner agencies who participate on task forces, but did not complete the NAGIA 2015 National Gang Report Survey. Thus, data from the 2014 FBI Safe Streets and Gang Task Force Survey was combined with 569 responses from the four components of the NAGIA 2015 National Gang Report Survey, law enforcement reporting, and open source information to develop a holistic picture of current gang activity across the country.

(U) The NAGIA 2015 National Gang Report Survey consisted of four components: a street gang survey; a prison gang survey; an outlaw motorcycle gang (OMG) survey; and a survey on gang activity related to US borders. The street gang survey was distributed to US gang investigators at every level across jurisdictions nationwide, while the prison gang survey was released to jails, prisons, and detention centers. The OMG survey was sent to members of the International Outlaw Motorcycle Gang Investigator's Association. A fourth survey was primarily distributed to gang investigators along the southwest border to collect data on gang activity related to US borders. Using the four-component methodology enabled the NGIC to collect more robust data on each specific topic. Dividing the survey into four parts allowed for the inclusion of more questions on each topic and facilitated completion by gang investigators working each specific topic. With this methodology, respondents were able to focus on their area of expertise. By contrast, the 2013 NGR relied on data from only one general survey that was disseminated to all gang investigators across all jurisdictions.

(U) Due to the utilization of a new survey methodology – using four targeted surveys as opposed to one universal survey – the 2015 NGR does not compare to either the 2013 NGR or the 2011 National Gang Threat Assessment. All longitudinal assessments herein are based entirely on data from the 2015 survey. One drawback to the 2015 methodology was crossover reporting that resulted in a higher margin of error when compiling such quantitative data as numbers and percentages. Due to this crossover, plus the voluntary nature of the survey, results herein lack representation from every jurisdiction. Thus, the NGIC recommends contacting state and local law enforcement agencies directly for more information on gang activity or gang membership numbers in a specific jurisdiction.

KEY FINDINGS

Gangs continue to proliferate, evolve, and develop criminal tradecrafts. Based on state, local, and federal law enforcement reporting, the NGIC assesses that:

- The US gang composition is approximately 88 percent street gang members, 9.5 percent prison gang members, and 2.5 percent outlaw motorcycle gang (OMG) members. NBGs pose the most violent and significant threat in most communities while prison gangs are viewed as the least problematic in most jurisdictions. OMGs are reported as the greatest threat in approximately 11 percent of jurisdictions, despite comprising only 2.5 percent of the gang composition.

What Does The Survey Do For us?

- Shows an increase in profiling incidents over 5 years (39 states)
- Shows exactly where it is happening so we can speak with the representatives in that area and hold them accountable
- Shows that legislative policies DO work
- Equips the grass-roots activists with a compelling and well structured argument
- Lays out a well structured picture of who is in the biker community and who is in the representative's district (ethnicity, veterans status, political affiliation, etc.)
- Debunks law enforcement's narrative that clubs are full of criminals and domestic terrorists

What Does The Survey Do For us?

- Shows an increase in profiling incidents over 5 years (39 states)
- Shows exactly where it is happening so we can speak with the representatives in that area and hold them accountable
- Shows that legislative policies DO work
- Equips the grass-roots activists with a compelling and well structured argument
- Lays out a well structured picture of who is in the biker community and who is in the representative's district (ethnicity, veterans status, political affiliation, etc.)
- Debunks law enforcement's narrative that clubs are full of criminals and domestic terrorists
